Not fun just rather boring and limited.. planesp

Problem is the Steam port is terrible. 640x480 resolution lock, and the game is terrible at letting the player try to adjust for it. It's like they just stuck the old PC version from the 90s on Steam without updating it at all.

This game is worth a try, but not this version.. Evopollution is a great idea, a great concept, and even because of the mostly bad reviews, I bought this game. But even if the idea is good - it was badly executed. The game is just plain boring, you wait - and wait. And wait. 'Till you have a million bucks ingame. There is no fun goals to aim for, no replay value, and after 30 minutes you are already sick of the game. But the graphics are well made - and with more objectives, more gameplay value, and other additions made, this came could become actually better. Consider making changes to boost the game's fun, and I will consider turning this into a positive review.. I, like many others waited patiently for five years for this game and I haven't been disappointed. The game is a little glitchy in places as others have pointed out so I won't go into any details. I highly recommend the game and will play again I'm sure when the minute problems have been ironed out. Thank you Goblinz team, I look forward to playing part three.

Ok so I reviewed the game after only around an hours play. As I got deeper into the game i realised it's riddled with bugs. I have never used a hint button in a game so much in my life. I realise the team rushed the game through and the devs weren't 100% happy with the final product, promising fixes along the way, but honestly, I would have rather waited another month until the bugs were fixed.

For me, it's not a patch on True Fear part 1 but a good effort for five years in the making!. toxic players

Let's Explore the Farm is among the three "Junior Field Trips" games from Humongous Entertainment. These games are similar to the Big Thinkers Games as they are entirely on learning rather than adventure. However I found the Junior Field Trips Games to be better than the Big Thinkers games cause these games are more informative and features a character named Buzzy the bug who is on par with Spy Fox, Pajama Sam, Freddi Fish, & Putt-Putt. There wasn't a particular order these games go by as all three of the games were released in 1995. So I decided to play this one in it's entirety first which is about Farms. The game give you the option to either explore the area or play a series of quizes or games. The exploration option takes longer as there's a lot of ground to cover in the farm area while you have various option to either hear Buzzy's remarks on the location or select an object to learn what it is with a dictionary page. This game can prove to be useful for school work as kids will be amazed how much work is done at a farm.. Playing it a long time after first having tried all levels etc is not a very jolly experience anymore.. This game is just such a joy. It's well made, well written, still beautiful to look at with deep and interesting mechanics. There is a lot to choose from and plenty of things available that suit different play styles. Challenging and diverse, with a lot of different gameplay mechanics (Impressive for that age).

And Bruce Campbell's voice throughout it all, it's just such a joy and still holds up really well!. Before playing this game, understand that it is not a big budget title (Released 2008) and there may be parts of the campaign that feel slow or an aspect of the game that gets annoying (like not having an endless sprint for example). But if you can look past the some of the little nuisances there is a lot of good gameplay. The visuals and sounds work well together. but the best part is blowing stuff up in your tank. And it is the tank driving that makes Tank Universal worth playing. Not the story, not the graphics, not the sound, the Tanks!. why isnt this a freebie. big butts no lies. Neat little game! Nicely made and fun variety of puzzles. Medium difficulty level.. 1st season was great.

Can't wait for more!
